Dear Friend:

In the long run, the problems of children of farm workers will be met by raising breadwinners' wages to such a level it is possible for families to survive without mothers of young children -- and, in some cases, young children themselves -- working in the fields.

But this solution will require considerable time. And, in the meanwhile, there are very immediate problems to be dealt with. From our experience in the fields and in farm labor residential areas, we have identified one of the most important of these problems. When mothers must work in agriculture, there are, under present circumstances, only a few ways to manage their small children. The children may be taken into the fields, where they play in polluted irrigation ditches or under the wheels of trucks. They may be left locked in a car all day. They may be left at home, under the care of a slightly older brother or sister who thereby misses school. Or they may be left at home, unattended.

None of these arrangements is acceptable. The absence of day care facilities for children of agricultural workers has most serious consequences for education, health, and general well-being. It is one of the leading concerns of farm workers themselves, and it should be of concern to the entire community.

An attempt is being made, in one farm labor neighborhood, to meet this problem on a self-help basis. In the Clover Road area of North Tracy, San Joaquin County, many mothers of small children will be working this fall in tomato fields, packing sheds, and canneries. An emergency day care center is being opened from August through October to provide care for as many of these small children as possible. Physical facilities for the center have been located. Contributions of second-hand toys, books, and equipment have been received. A number of volunteer workers have offered their services.

But an estimated $750 or $800 is needed to renovate the physical facilities, provide the children with suitable meals, and meet the minimal day-to-day expenses of our volunteer teachers. The income of farm workers is too low to pay more than a nominal charge for child care. (Average earnings of tomato pickers are about $5.00 per day.) It is therefore necessary that we ask for contributions from interested individuals and organizations to assist us in providing a creative program for the children of North Tracy this fall.

Although the initial purpose of the project is to furnish child care, it is hoped this will be merely the first of many activities on which the residents of the Clover Road neighborhood will cooperate. We are therefore calling the undertaking the "Clover Community Program," looking forward to eventual expansion into adult education and other appropriate fields.

We hope, too, that the Clover Community Program will have significance beyond the immediate neighborhood involved. We hope that this will prove to be only the first of a number of similar self-help community development projects throughout the farm labor areas of California.

Please help by sending your contribution to the Treasurer of the Program, Mrs. Thomas Frazier, at the address above. Contact the Secretary, Mrs. Jessie Shah, if you desire further information. And come to Clover Road to visit us any time! Thank you on behalf of the people of the Clover community.
